As part of the NYU BeTogether initiative, the Office of Global Inclusion, Equity, and Inclusion Excellence (OGI) has officially launched the pilot Justice Zone module. This 60-75-minute pilot educational module has been created to support a shared understanding of the scope of racial injustice and the need for inclusion. It is centered in the US context. Additional context-specific modules will be created in the 2023 academic year, while providing important foundational feedback from our NYU community ahead of the finalized module.

This module is designed to enhance understanding and reflection around various aspects of race and inequality. It is appropriate for students, faculty, and staff to use individually and in groups. It serves as a resource to encourage ongoing education and discussion around these issues. The module features content that is grounded in evidence and reflects best practices for inclusive instructional practices.

To ensure broad access and engagement, the module is available for free to current NYU students, faculty, and staff. It is also accessible to the public for a nominal fee. The Justice Zone module is the first in a series of initiatives aimed at advancing race and equity at NYU. It is aligned with the OGI's mission to promote a diverse, equitable, and inclusive learning environment.

The Justice Zone module will be updated periodically to reflect the latest research, best practices, and educational tools. It will also be made available in multiple languages to accommodate the diverse needs of the NYU community. The Justice Zone module is part of a broader effort to create a more inclusive and equitable campus community. It is a key component of the NYU BeTogether initiative, which aims to foster an environment of belonging, respect, and mutual understanding.
