of poetry or prose, then our seven translators, representing NYU undergraduate and graduate students and alums and faculty, were given a brief period of time to produce their translations. We opened with readings of the Spanish and Arabic texts followed by readings of each of the translations, then we compared all of the translations and had a lively conversation and debate among the translators, authors, and the hybrid audience. Dear SPS Community, I am very excited to share all the good news that is happening around our School and the University this month. In a bold and historic move, NYU announced the selection of a new president for the University. Linda G. Mills will be the first woman to lead the University in its almost 200-year history! I am delighted that the president-elect will bring her innovation and creativity to NYU, and I look forward to showcasing our progress in these areas with her. The timing of the announcement couldn't be more perfect as Women's History Month begins March 1. This year's theme is "Celebrating Women Who Tell Our Stories." Although strides have been made in gender equity, we must all do our part to continue telling women's stories and creating a diverse, just, and Congratulations to Lee and Bri! I also want to mention the excellent work of Mary Beth Altier's global affairs Warmly, will build on and contribute to his teaching, research, and program development at the NYU SPS Tisch Institute for Global Sport, leadership in an NYU initiative with the United States Conference of Mayors that centers on sports-led development, and collaborations with colleagues in NYU's Global Network University that focus on the power of sport to make a positive impact in communities and society. Tisch Center for Hospitality clinical assistant professor Richie Karaburun recently spoke with Smart Meetings about the HI Hub Incubator, and how the entrepreneurship hub is designed to support up-and-coming hospitality business ideas.

Last week, Annelise Finegan, the academic director of Translation & Interpreting in the Center for Publishing and Applied Liberal Arts, co-hosted a translation slam with Liberal Studies professor Jennifer Zoble. The slam featured Spanish poetry and Arabic prose. The authors provided a short piece
